Introducing 7ob, where even the name is a play on words

Saudi fashion and urban design company 7ob – or Hob, if you're not overly familiar with Arabic-Roman transliteration – is the latest to specialise in the now popular art of Arabising of t-shirt logos. By turns humorous, nostalgic, ironic or abstract, and of course all painfully hip, 7ob's designs use street slang in Arabic calligraphy and place otherwise mundane objects in an artistic context.

"The word 7ob has both an innocent and rebellious connotation," says Hani Alireza, the designer and founder. "This double meaning is the framework for the brand and the designs. The brand 7ob is really all about attitude. It is more than a t-shirt; it's a point of view and a platform for design and identity."
